

THE F. F. SANCHEZ BIBLIOGRAPHY

Raging waters knows no bounds. A man of vitality, Dr. Fernando F. Sanchez was able to combine his administrative functions with his duties as a scientist. His first publication appeared in 1964. Since then, he has written altogether nine book chapters, edited two books and one monograph, and contributed 49 articles to various scientific journals. These publications cover the areas of pesticide toxicology, vertebrate pest management, locust control and integrated pest management.

There are three distinct phases in his published works. The first phase reflected his interest and concentration on insecticide toxicology. Most of his early publications dealt with the mode of action and efficacy of insecticides. As he took on the leadership of the Rodent Research Center in 1971, his researches on toxicology was carried on to the control of rodents, distinctly marking the second phase. The experiences and knowledge gained in these early phases of his career, coupled with the growing responsibility of institutionalizing crop protection endeavors of the country through the National Crop Protection Center, inspired the third and most important phase. His love for toxicology is subsumed in the pursuit of a holistic pest management approach and the responsible handling and utilization of pesticides. His succeeding major publications are then characterized by the summing up of crop protection problems and comprehensive analysis of trends in pest management implementation that guided both policy makers and researchers.
